

VIRGINIA TURN FOXES INTO HUMANS

Ever since Beatrix Potter penned Peter Rabbit, artists have been inspired to draw animals in human situations.

For Camberwell Girls Grammar student Virginia Hua, foxes have given her a chance to exhibit her artwork in a gallery.

Virginia won the Australian Academy of Design 2008 Poster Prize Competition.

Her winning entry showed foxes lining up to wait for a tram.

"I'm much more interested in animals than humans," Virginia said. "I like to draw animals as humans."

The Hong Kong native's obsession with foxes is a strange phenomenon as she had never seen one before coming to Australia nearly three years ago.

"I saw a fox one morning whilst walking to School and seeing it in real life made them look so much cuter than the pictures that I had seen of them."

Virginia wishes to pursue a career in design or cartoons.

